

GENDER AND CITIZENSHIP
SPRING 2008
POLITICAL SCIENCE 309/SOCIOLOGY 356

“Political freedom . . . means ‘the right to be a participator in government,’ or it means nothing.”

Course Description

This course, team taught by Professors Linda Zerilli and Ann Orloff, will examine several aspects of the gendered character of citizenship: political participation and representation, social rights and economic rights. We aim to understand citizenship from both "top down" and "bottom up" perspectives. What do states do, via citizenship rights, to shape gender relations? How do gender relations influence the nature of citizenship? How has feminism emerged as a radical challenge to the androcentrism and restricted character of the democratic public sphere? We expand on conventional conceptions of political participation and citizenship rights to include the grassroots democratic activism that gave birth to the modern women's movement. We explore how women's political efforts have given rise to the creation of counter-public spheres and alternative visions of democracy, social provision and economic participation, as well as reshaping formal politics and policies.

Course Requirements

Attendance is mandatory. Participation counts as 20% of your grade. You take a midterm and a final, each of which counts for 40% of your grade.

Course Readings

The readings will be available in a reader at Quartet Copies. Read “required texts” and “documents” for each class session. Read the texts and documents in the order in which they appear on this syllabus.
